It was a little school boy who, when asked to give a sentence containing the word notwithstanding, wrote The man s trousers were worn out, not with standing. The Foreigner How can we even pretend to treat of humor and assume to classify it, without speaking of the humor of the foreigner? He brings with him not only an inadequate knowledge of this mysterious and rule-less language of ours, but he also brings a mental twist we natives do not have. At Dixon, 111., there lived a German who had a son of whom he was inordinately fond. George was the Baldwin apple of his right eye. One day the glad tidings came that George, who had been away for a good while, was returning the next day. The old man was tickled almost to death over the news,...
